Teachers Assn. Pays Tribute To Retired Principal

As a token of their appreciation of Eugene V. Lovely, former principal of Puncard high school, the Andover Public School Teachers' association at its recent meeting presented the following tribute which was spread upon the records of the organization:

Once upon a time there was a young man fired with zest for living and for sharing his enthusiasm with young people. For his laboratories he chose the athletic field and the classrooms of Puncard Free School.

Coming to Puncard in 1911, he gave unstintingly of his hours and himself in training boys and girls. Their achievements and successes in academics and on the athletic field were his reward for his tireless efforts on their behalf. Yet his chief interest in young people was in seeing them grow from boys and girls into successful, upright men and women, rather than in the mere development of outstanding athletes and scholars. Nor did his interest in the individual pupils decrease upon their graduation from school, as the host of his loyal friends in the town of Andover testifies.

Recognition of his worth grew as the years passed, in spite of his natural diffidence in claiming his due. The longer people knew him, the more they admired the

U. N. Secretariat Here Next Fall

The Woman's Fellowship of the South church, meeting at the home of its president, Mrs. J. J. Tavern, voted at the annual meeting to sponsor a weekend visitation by the members of the secretariat of the United Nations over September 30 and October 1.

Many interesting friendships were made between Andover residents and visitors who came from the United Nations last fall.

man. Hardships and disappointments he took in his stride, his innate buoyance of spirit and sense of humor lightening the strain another man might have found hard to bear.

Gradually his integrity, his ability to impart his knowledge, his skills, and his ideals to others, his devotion to Puncard and to young people received their reward, for he rose professionally until he became principal of the school which he had served for so many years.

More important than this to him, however, were his many friends. Indeed, his loyalty to his ideals and to the people with whom he worked and associated daily made consideration for them more vital to him than any salary he might have received had he been willing to leave Andover.

To paraphrase familiar lines: To know a person and respect his worth and keep your opinion to yourself is worse than nothing. (Continued on Page Two)

Shrubs In Bloom At Bird Sanctuary

Many of the flowering shrubs at the Phillips academy sanctuary are now in full bloom. The Carolina rhododendrons, white and pink dogwoods, and the torch azaleas are at their height. The Mountain ash is just about ready, the catawba rhododendrons will be out soon, the mountain laurel is budded and with the orange and lemon azelia should be blooming in a few days.

Abbot To Award Diplomas To 54

Eighteen states and three foreign countries are represented among the 54 graduates of Abbot academy. In addition to the New England states, the class includes students from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Georgia, Kentucky, Indiana, Iowa, Texas, Colorado, Wisconsin; and from outside the United States, Brazil, Chile and Norway.

The school's 121st commencement program begins Friday evening, June 2, with step-singing on the porch of Abbot hall. On Saturday morning the traditional "last chapel" service presided over by Miss Marguerite Hearsey, principal, brings the year of student activities to a close. Honors are announced and appointments for the coming year reported.

The seniors will attend the noon gathering of the Abbot alumnae in their annual meeting, and at the same time will be inducted into the organization as new members. In the afternoon Miss Hearsey will be hostess to the seniors and their guests, and the Abbot faculty at a garden party on the grounds of Sunset lodge. In the evening, in Davis hall at 8 o'clock a group of students will appear under the direction of Miss Emily Hale in a production of "The Man Who Married a Dumb Wife".

The baccalaureate sermon at the 10:45 a.m. service in the South church will be given by the Rev. Halford Luccock, D.D. (Continued on Page Seven)

Ask Ballardvale Dam Repairs

Residents of Ballardvale are circulating petitions to have the mill dam in their district repaired.

They feel that the old barrier needs immediate repairs and sometime in February brought this to the attention of the chairman of the board of selectmen. Mr. Hardy made arrangements to send a county engineer to make an inspection and his findings substantiated the opinion of the people.

At present they are trying to determine who should bear the responsibility for this repair.

A four-fold petition is being prepared, one for the board of selectmen, one for the county commissioners, another for the representatives and the fourth for the senator of this district, to have the proper responsibility fixed.

Andover honored its war dead Tuesday with Memorial day exercises held under sodden skies that made raincoats and slickers the uniform of the day.

The heavy showers that fell in the morning took their toll in the number of marchers and spectators alike but in no way lessened the formal tribute paid by those who remembered the sacrifices made in the nation's wars.

Members of the town's veteran organizations and their auxiliaries, together with military, patriotic and civic units united in a ceremony fitting the spirit of the occasion.

Several hundred donned uniforms and braving the rain formed a parade behind flags and bands to march through town streets.

The make up of the parade was as follows: Lionel Boulanger, disabled veteran in jeep; police department, the selectmen and Sen. John E. Coddair Jr., fire department, Marshal Richard Wrigley and staff, Gold Star Mothers, platoon from regular army at Fort Devens, the Andover Brass band, Veterans of Foreign Wars, girl scout troops, Disabled American Veterans, boy scout troops, Clan MacPherson Bagpipe band, American Legion post, All Women's post, Legion auxiliary.

Starting from Park street the parade went to Bartlet street to the Memorial auditorium where it remained in formation while brief ceremonies were conducted by the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

The marchers then proceeded to Bartlet street, Puncard avenue, Main street and Salem street to the Phillips academy Memorial tower on the hill where a short service was conducted by the Disabled American Veterans' chapter.

The parade then came out to Main street and proceeded by way of School and Central streets to the square where the main service of the day was conducted at the Memorial library by the American Legion.

With the massed colors of all units drawn up in front of the entrance Commander Wrigley called upon the Rev. Paul E. Callahan of the Ballardvale Methodist church for prayer. This was followed by the playing of "The Star Spangled Banner" by the Andover Brass band after which Rep. J. Everett Collins delivered the oration of the day.

At the conclusion of these services the parade disbanded and the various units went to the cemeteries where other exercises were held. Services were held at the American Legion lot and the Veterans of Foreign Wars lot in Spring Grove cemetery; at the Old South Church and Indian Ridge school, St. Augustine's and West Parish cemeteries.

The Memorial day committee was made up as follows: Ira Buxton, Sons of the G.A.R., honorary chairman; from the American Legion, Comdr. Richard Wrigley, general chairman; Albert Cole Jr., Robert Volker and Kenneth L. Sherman; from All Woman's post, Comdr. Jeannie Mitchell, Louise Woldenden, Dorothy Volker and Mary G. Bailey; from the Disabled American Veterans, Comdr. Timothy, John Riley Jr., Charles Lundergan and Joseph A. Horan; from the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Comdr. William Hulse, Charles McKew, George Milnes and Thomas J. Eldred.

AT THE LIBRARY

The Library has added the following books to its shelves in recent weeks, and all books may be borrowed for home reading. Fiction titles may be reserved as well as books of non-fiction by the penny reserve system. Ask about it if you have certain titles in mind that seem to be 'out' when you want them.

Once Upon A Time Wilkins
An interesting story, by the author of 'And So, Victoria' of a young man who wakes up to find himself in a furniture van, jogging along over the roads of post-war England in strange company.

The Square Terrill
Luce Landry was one of the last to relinquish the customs of the 'Square' when, after the war and the crash, the old way of life was dissolved.

The Storm and the Silence Walker
Readers of Maurice Walsh stories will find something of the same charm in this adventure tale set in the moors, the valleys and the salmon river region of the Scottish highlands.

A Few Flowers For Shiner Llewellyn
The hero of this novel is Snowy, a Cockney truck-driver, and he shares the honor with Rosie, his truck. As unusual as the author's first success - 'How Green Was My Valley'.

The Only Gift Eklund
An unusually well-written novel with the universal plot of a woman who lives only for her children, and the inevitable loss of her dearest possessions.

In Sicily Vittorini
Ernest Hemingway, in the introduction, reminds the reader that Vittorini wrote this colorful and alive story in 1937 under the strict demands of Fascism.

One on the House Lasswell
If you enjoyed 'Suds In Your Eye', this is a must book for you. The ever-charming pair of benevolent ladies hard at work again!

The Golden Coast Rooney
A seafaring adventure of the 17th century, as exciting as any done by Stevenson, himself.

The Wall Hersey
Here was the gradual extermination of the Jews in a Warsaw ghetto and the resistance of defenseless men and women against the full brute force of the Germans.

The Horse's Mouth Cary
The third in the trilogy begun with 'Herself Surprised' and 'To Be a Pilgrim'.

CAN DO Paint Does Wonders In the Right Place

EVERYBODY splatters paint—on floors, linoleum, furniture, metal fixtures and practically anything else that might be within range when he is working with brush and can. It's something that just happens, and then the problem is how to remove the paint spot from the place where it shouldn't be.

Next time the necessity arises to remove a spot of fresh paint from a piece of furniture upon which it has dropped, try rubbing it with a soft cloth that has been dipped in lemon oil. You'll find that the oil will leave the surface of the furniture admirably glossy and the finish unmarred.

A different situation is that involving the laborious job of scraping paint from widow lifts, door knobs and similar small hardware. However, you can eliminate the work in this case by removing the items from whatever they are fastened to and soaking them overnight in a strong lye solution.

Then remove them carefully from the lye and rinse them thoroughly under the cold water tap. The paint will float away without damaging the metal. When working with lye, always be extremely careful not to let any of it get on your skin or clothing. If this should happen, immediate washing in running water generally will prevent any serious damage.

Commercial paint remover, which you can buy at your hardware store, is, of course, a great boon. And here's a suggestion you can try which might improve the efficacy of the compound:

Using sawdust—yes, just plain sawdust—with the paint remover is often more effective than the usual procedure of applying the remover and then scraping the work. Brush on the paint remover and then scrub the surface until it no longer feels tacky. Now add more remover and spread sawdust evenly over it. Scrub the surface with a wood block until the work is dry. Now you can scrape the paint off easily and with more even results.

Here's a good trick! When you have paint spots on your good linoleum and no paint remover in the house, got to work with nail polish remover. Just put a little on a soft cloth and rub the spots. They'll disappear in a short time.

By the way, you'll find that you can whisk paint stains from your hands with no trouble at all if they have been rubbed with vaseline before starting the paint job.

YOU can do a lot of things with lacquer, or shellac. For instance, the outer covering of a lampecord will not fray near the ends if you coat the edge with lacquer before the cord is connected inside a plug or socket.

If you're a hunter or a fisherman you always carry waterproof matches on your trips. Waterproof them yourself by dipping them in lacquer and stand them on end to dry. Sound silly? You can stand them heads-up by sticking them in a scrub brush.

Just Testing Them

The nice old lady smiled at the little girl who had been left in charge of the cake shop.

"Don't you sometimes feel tempted to eat one of the cream puffs, my dear?" she said.

The little girl was quite shocked. "Of course not," she replied. "That would be stealing. I only lick them."

EDITORIAL THOUGHTS

THE SCHOOL COMMITTEE ACTS

The school committee gave much time to its consideration of candidates before it named a new headmaster for Punchard high school.

When it failed to agree on any of the public school candidates presented by Supt. Sherman, it turned to John M. Kemper of Phillips academy for a suggestion and accepted his recommendation.

In its choice of Harold Howe 2nd, a member of the academy faculty, for this $6000 position the committee has a young man of excellent school and family background who is hardly a stranger to the town inasmuch as he has been living here and teaching history in the school on the hill since 1947.

Announcement of the committee's choice of a man with no public school or previous school administrative experience, and of its method in reaching its decision comes as quite a surprise. It has created a decided stir in the town.

In its announcement the committee says in effect: "We were unable to do this job so we called upon a man recently out of the army to make the choice for us."

General comment upon its action seems to be that it is a decided reflection upon the entire public school system of the state.

Supt. Sherman presented 13 public school men for consideration but the committee could not agree on any one of them.

We have frequently boasted in the past that our Andover schools have furnished high administrative officials for other communities, yet the community did not see fit to select one for promotion in its own town.

It would be interesting to know just what qualifications the committee required for headmaster of Punchard.

We haven't much sympathy with the fellow who is ready to be generous with our money. -- Lewiston (Pa.) Sentinel

VIEWS OF THE NEWS

BY LEONARD F. JAMES

In the Wonderland of political confusion, Alice is constantly popping up with embarrassing questions. She doesn't understand that adults are not always wiser because they are older. She seems unable to realize that it is not quite good taste to ask too many questions. Especially embarrassing questions.

Alice Hears the Minister of Food

The other day she read that Mr. Maurice Webb, minister of food in the British government, was giving a talk. And since the child is very fond of food, she wanted to go along. Apparently she thought that some good might come of the meeting. We asked her why she really wanted to go, and her reply was that Mr. Webb was a very important man who seemed able to decide what she could buy in the food shops. And the thing that bothered her most was that she couldn't get enough of her favorite vegetables.

Nothing would do but that she must sit in the front row directly under Mr. Webb's eyes. And that gentleman was soon completely beguiled by Alice's innocent look and flattering attention. So he talked at her, presumably believing that if his youngest listener could sit enraptured, then his older audience could follow him. He explained what a drought was and showed that last year's drought was the cause of the poor vegetable crop. Alice could understand that, and nodded in agreement. But a puzzled frown creased her forehead and caused the speaker to ask her if there was anything she did not understand.

Explain Why Vegetables Are Dear

Why, yes, she answered. Hadn't Mr. Webb said something the other day about capitalism causing the shortage? Was a drought a sort of capitalism? Mr. Webb smiled indulgently and said he'd make himself clear. What he had said the other day was really very simple. The high price of vegetables was really due to the fact that they were handled by private owners without the benefit of price controls. "Oh," said Alice, "you mean that if the socialists sold vegetables, prices would be low even if there were not many carrots to buy?" Mr. Webb replied that he really wasn't talking about carrots, and it would be much better to stick to vegetables in general. Because then the picture would be clearer.

We gave Alice a large chewy caramel, and that kept her quiet for a while. That gave Mr. Webb the chance to disentangle himself, and he plunged bravely on with his argument. You see, he said, if maximum price regulations were kept on, then vegetables would disappear from the shops.

Why They Needn't Be So Dear

The man on the other side of Alice must have been a Conservative. Or perhaps he was just a respectable Englishman who liked to hear youngsters ask questions. Because when he saw Alice trying to get rid of her caramel, he very unkindly offered her his handkerchief. When Mr. Webb paused for breath, Abbot academy graduated a class of 55 students this week. National guardsmen demonstrated the latest types of guns and weapons to local police officers at a meeting at West Boylston.

Richard E. O'Brien was re-nominated postmaster for Ballardvale recently by President Roosevelt.

An Andover committee to be part of the "Committee to defend America by Aiding the Allies" is now being formed. The first meeting will be held in Lower town hall.

Colleges throughout the country have degreed many local young men and women this spring who have not only shown scholastic aptitude but have also stood out in sports and other activities of their Alma Maters.

Alice had the chance to ask another question.

"I want to know," she asked, what makes them disappear. You say that if the store-keeper sells them at any price he can get, then they are very high. Then you say that if you fix a top price that he can charge, then they disappear. What makes them disappear?"

Why They Appear

We couldn't untangle that one either, and it did seem a little hard to try to stick Mr. Webb with it. But he very cleverly came back to the drought and explained that too much sunshine and too little rain were really the trouble. But Alice's childish treble cut through Mr. Webb's convincing tones. "I don't want to buy the carrots that didn't grow," she explained. "I want to know why I can't buy the ones that did grow."

Now if Mr. Webb had been in the house of commons, he could have dodged that one very easily. He would simply say that he needed a week to prepare a written answer. But he had to think of some reply about the carrots that did grow. "If distribution were socialized," he answered, "high prices could be avoided even in a season of bad drought."

And Disappear

"If the shop keeper could charge any price he wanted?" asked Alice. "No," replied Mr. Webb, "because then prices would be too high." "I see," said Alice, "but if you fixed the top price, then carrots would disappear?" "Certainly," answered Mr. Webb, "and the real way to get prices down is to have the housewife refuse to buy the vegetables."

"Oh dear," exclaimed Alice, "I thought you said that we ought to eat more vegetables to get more nourishing vitamins!" That was an easy one for the minister to answer. "The Labour Party has only been in power for five years. Any complaints should be addressed to the Conservatives."

Q.E.D.

But Alice was now the center of attraction and really enjoying herself. She asked if she could say a few words. The audience insisted that she be given the chance. To our embarrassment, she opened up a volume of the parliamentary report she'd smuggled in under her coat and read paragraphs here and there from a question period directed at Mr. Webb. The government had recently removed the restriction that a hotel or restaurant could not charge more than the equivalent of one dollar for a meal. The bill might come to five dollars or so after the house charge, the cabaret charge and the service charge had been added, but the food was still worth only a dollar. Alice wanted to know why the government had removed that dollar limit. Wasn't that against all Mr. Webb's arguments about carrots? The minister had carefully explained in parliament that the price limit was removed because "the balance of public advantage" lies that way, because the importance of the tourist trade is more significant than the psychological effect of letting a restaurant charge an honest price for a worthwhile meal.

Alice stopped reading and asked a question. "If you let the hotel sell a good meal to people who want to pay for it, aren't you encouraging private enterprise?" At that point we dragged Alice out to catch a train. The trouble with children is that they ask too many questions. Obvious questions.

Report Motorists Impede Ambulance

Autoists who fail to give the ambulance the right of way may find themselves facing court charges, Police Chief George A. Dane warned, after another instance of this practice was called to his attention.

The latest incident reported by the fire department occurred at Whittier and Park streets where a motorist turned the corner and stopped his car in such a manner that the ambulance had to make a right turn instead of going left.

"We have the names of several people who have failed to give the ambulance the right of way," Chief Dane said. "This will have to be discontinued or we will put them right into court."

What Our Readers Say—

'PROTECTIVE' TARIFF

Editor of the Townsman:

American industry needs, and always has needed, less government interference. It has suffered particularly from that type of interference against which Adam Smith especially directed his epoch-making plea for free enterprise: to wit, the protective tariff.

The word "protective", as applied to tariff, means "intended to hamper one business with the intention of helping another business." "Protective", in the phrase "protective tariff", has never had any other meaning than this.

It would be bad enough if the tariff only interfered with the interests of the ultimate consumer; especially in these days when the increasing proportion of old people in the population increases the number of those whose only conspicuous economic status is that of ultimate consumers. We old folks are the ones who are hardest hit by inflation, otherwise called cheap money, otherwise called general high prices, otherwise called high cost of living.

And the plan of protective tariff has always been to make prices high and keep them high. It has never attempted to accomplish any of its purposes by any other process than boosting prices.

But, furthermore, American industrial prosperity, the American standard of high wages, the American standard of comfortable living depend mainly on our strong industries, the ones that are strong enough to go into international competition and win. These are our exporting industries. Now the protective tariff is a millstone round the neck of all exporting industries; it hinders their creation in the first place, and it dwarfs their growth after they are created.

The reason is that there is no object in exporting unless you get paid for your exports. The pay has to be in trade. We once imagined that our exports were to be paid for in money, which, in the absence of an international currency, used to mean gold.

This became obviously absurd as soon as America began to be a leading gold-mining country while our principal customers had almost no gold mines. It has grown still more absurd since Uncle Sam has cornered most of the world's gold and is holding it unused at Fort Knox.

Reduced to the baldest imaginable simplicity, the case is that our factories cannot afford to send automobiles and refrigerators to Switzerland and Japan unless they can get in return some such things as Swiss watches and Japanese glass goods to pay our factory workers with. In practice the trading is not done in such an elementary fashion. What is done is that the exported goods are paid for in international bills of exchange. The bills of exchange are higher or lower in price and therefore getting them is more profitable or less profitable, according to the general course of international trade.

To get them at a price that is favorable to American export business, either we must be importing the Swiss watches and Japanese glass, or else, as is more largely the case, there must be some such process as that Cuba imports these things from Switzerland and Japan and then we import a lot of Cuban sugar and, as happened during the late war, some shipments of Cuban rubber-soled canvas shoes. The details keep shifting; the permanent thing is that when we import a lot we can export a lot, and when we do not import much we cannot export much.

Our present policy appears to be that we whittle lightly away at the problem by a lot of bilateral treaties in each of which we engage to remove from our export industries some particular small part of the hindrance imposed by our tariff, on condition that the other power will at the same time remove from our export industries some part of the hindrance its tariff imposes. This gets us nowhere, not only because it does too little but because it does it too unevenly.

For, of course, every economic shift is bound to inconvenience somebody. The introduction of the automobile was a great help to the nation, including the Western ranchman; but it was a crushing blow to the horse-breeding industry, and without doubt it bankrupted some ranchmen.

Now when we reduce the tariff, not by a broad sweep but by one item at a time, the man whose toes are stepped on by the reduction of that item has obvious grounds for coming around and saying, "See here; you ought not to pick on me, making just the particular cut that will hurt my business while you leave my business still burdened with nearly all the load of the general body of high tariffs."

What we ought to do is to slash away from American industry by our own unilateral action, asking no consent from any foreign country, the whole network of the protective tariff.

If we left standing so much of the duties as would not prevent extensive importation in every department, then Uncle Sam would get a tremendous additional revenue which he now loses by having the rates on many things so high that these things are not imported and therefore pay no duty.

It is a familiar fact that most of our duties are laid on goods of which we are importing none or almost none. This obviously means that most of our duties are strangling our trade.

BASEBALL

Lynnfield Center handed the junior high a defeat last week at Lynnfield, the score being 8-4. Joe Morgan pitched for A.J.H.S. A later game with Brooks School saw A.J.H.S. emerge victorious. Jim Floyd, pitcher, kept the opposing runs down to 2 while A.J.H. scored 7.

Notes

The ninth grade was a guest of the senior high at a recent assembly for the presentation of various awards. The junior high is very proud of George McCafferty, who is the only freshman to receive a letter in varsity baseball. Also, Barbara White received an award for earning the third highest number of points in the all girls band, which is only achieved by hard earnest work.

Final exams are being awaited by pupils who are "burning the midnight oil." They will be concluded Thursday and Friday of this week.

The date of final assembly has been changed to June 20, at 10. Parents and friends are cordially invited to attend the last assembly of the year.

Taken up in the art class of Miss Frances Dalton at Pynchard high school this year for the first time, clay modeling has found favor with numerous students. Photo shows the work of some of the students on the table where Priscilla Wilkinson and Justin Curry are working on their models.

DISTRICT NOTES

A meeting attended by about 15 explorer scouts from post 75 of St. Augustine's church and an explorer from post 72 of the Free church was held in the Memorial Hall library Monday evening May 22. Picture slides were operated by Fred Schaberg, advisor of post 72, and Merrill Burnett was the narrator. Lt. Leon Mowry of the U.S. coast guard reserve spoke to the explorers in connection with a training course planned for next fall. The course will include a foundation of knowledge of the coast guard, basic training in seamanship, safety at sea, small boat handling, fundamentals of radar and sonar, information on larger ships, navigation, and other interesting features. It is expected that a group of at least 20 explorers will take the course.

Unit Activities

St. Augustine's church troop 75 met Tuesday evening, May 23 with William Dolan, scoutmaster, Daniel Worcester, assistant scoutmaster, and Francis Kelly, troop committeeman. The troop practised on events for the council camporee to be held at Camp Onway June 3, 4, and 5. John Souter, scoutmaster of troop 72 visited the troop. Walter Caswell district commissioner, inspected the troop, and instructed the scouts in the proper wearing of insignia. A final meeting will be held this week to complete plans for the camporee.

Post 75 of St. Augustine's church also met at the same time. Edwin Zelezny, advisor, completed registration papers and the post will be officially registered with about 12 senior scouts and an explorer post committee.

Post 72 of the Free church met in the vestry Wednesday evening, May 24 with Fred Schaberg, advisor. The navigation class was not in session that evening as Capt. Arthur Sherman, USAFR, could not attend. Final plans were discussed for the weekend hike and camping trip. The explorers met at the church with packs and equipment and were transported to the camping area by Howard Johnson, Mrs. Fred Schaberg, Walter Caswell, and Arthur Scharzenberg. A number of explorers worked on the cooking merit badge requirements, but none completed it. Howard Johnson, merit badge counselor, reviewed the work on cooking. Those staying overnight until Sunday noon were Sunday noon were Calvin Hatch, Peter Caswell, Alan Hughes, Alan Parker, Russell Johnson, Leo Ruel, and Fred Schaberg, advisor. At
